The Walk Part 6 - I Love

If only I could change her...

I now understand it was always me that needed to change...

By this point in my journey I have come to truly understand this new way of living in peace with my Higher Power and the world. I remember (now fondly) the first moments of seeing the Steps and wishing they had put these two Steps up front so I could get the people around me off my back.

I call Steps 8 and 9 the Bridge Steps because it is here that I rebuild relationships by presenting the new me to the world, and there is deep-seated joy in this endeavor. Of course there is a moment of doubt and even a little shame as we reconcile the past, but the truth of these two Steps is that we now have a way to live free and at peace in the world and with the people we love.

In beginning of this journey I sought a way out of DIS-EASE - note the word play... And yes the placating of those around me is a tool of my disease. But there is something truly profound in Steps 8&9. If I have been diligent in my previous Steps, I will see a new world spread out before me so grand and beautiful I will never want to look back into the darkness and discomfort of my compulsive eating.

It no longer mystifies me why the bulk of the promises are attached to these Steps.

Refraining

During the period of abstinence, I had a thought about refraining. The old saying of Abraham Lincoln's "you're about as happy as you make up your mind to be" could be changed around to say "you're about as abstinent as you make up your mind to be."

Each day for 30+ days now I have gotten out of bed and made the choice to refrain from picking up extra food. Even on days of struggle, I stuck to this choice - the choice of "don't pick up no matter what." Of course I know I didn't make it through my own willpower. I give my HP the credit, but I am the one that had to make up my mind.

Magnetic Nut

The jar of nuts nearby is blinking red for my eye my taste buds say to extend your hand to your salty friend.

Don't think about the fat remember only that it feels so good to taste its buzz cannot be replaced.

And there goes my hand of steel so fast my mind can't appeal no matter the harm to my gut by the modest magnetic nut.

Glenn C. - 03/28/2011

Emanuel and Andi, thanks so much for your willingness and decision to take the co-editorship of the newsletter. Although I have not been active in OA for a long time, I am definitely experiencing the benefits. I am presently working on a step study based on a book that I downloaded and printed out from the OA website. In addition to the meetings (the one on Sunday evening at Pantego Bible Fellowship), I finally feel like I am making some progress in recovery from my overeating addiction.

Discussing the Big Book's use of the term "allergy of the body," the step study book asks me to answer certain questions - one of which is: "Are there certain foods you think you cannot live without?" As I reflected I thought about the last time I bought a big container of nuts that I kept on the table next to my easy chair and how it seemed to be almost like a magnet to my right hand. So here [at left] is a poem that came out of that reflection. - Glenn C.
